Is staff turnover costing your business?

A case study in moving from measurement to improvement

West Arnhem Regional Council

West Arnhem Regional Council (WARC) covers an area of almost 50,000 square kilometres in the western part of Arnhem Land in the Northern Territory. It is an area that is filled with stunning natural landscapes and is steeped in the cultural legacy of the Aboriginal people of the Northern Territory.

More than two thirds of the region's population of just over 6,000 identify as Aboriginal Australians, who reside in a collection of towns, communities, and outstations. WARC provides a range of services to five towns and communities across four wards. It is also one of the largest employers in the region, with more than 250 staff.

WARC's core services include waste management, maintaining parks and gardens, infrastructure, and roads. WARC also delivers a range of community and commercial services.

The need for change

Leading up to 2020, WARC's employee turnover had been at 57% for the past three years. This was costing WARC an estimated $2.9 million dollars each year. In February of 2020 an internal organisational review was carried out which recommended significant changes. The high levels of employee turnover and the results of the review, prompted WARC to take a closer look at its employee experience. The new CEO Daniel Findley met with a majority of the 250 staff to understand what it is that gets his staff up in the morning, and what keeps them awake at night. During his discussions, he realised that staff wanted change.

WARC decided that setting a baseline for employee engagement and employee experience was critical for the improvement journey. Insync was selected to partner with WARC to deliver an important employee survey across the business.

What WARC needed from Insync

- An extensive local government benchmark
- Comprehensive reporting by various demographic splits
- Flexibility in rewording questions into plain English where possible
- Ability to roll out a survey and reporting at light speed

The solution

Over the past two years Insync has been working with WARC to measure levels of employee alignment and engagement, identify problems and provide the following solutions:

- An evidenced based framework that has been academically and statistically validated
- Extensive Australian local government benchmark data with over 40,000 responses to contextualize results
- Research and project management expertise to guide WARC's team through the exercise
- Use of multiple modes of survey administration to increase response rates
- A comprehensive set of reports housed in a central portal for secure storage and easy distribution
- A comprehensive debrief of the survey results with the CEO and survey project team highlighting areas of strength as well as optimal areas of investment to boost engagement and alignment

What was done after the first round of feedback

Based on the employee feedback, WARC decided to focus on four key areas:

Performance building through professional development

Top-down communication
– improving the way changes and decisions are shared with employees

Employee reward and recognition

Collaboration between departments and offices

WARC moved swiftly from reporting on the survey results to action planning. Execution of the action plans was a high priority task. The results of these efforts were evident when WARC resurveyed in 2021.

Overall alignment scores had improved by 16% which put the WARC's results into the top quartile of Australia's local government benchmark.

Employee engagement improved by 10% and this result put WARC's engagement levels into the top 10% of the Australian local government benchmark.

Survey results for pride in the organisation and advocating WARC as an employer of choice, rose by 11 and 16 percent respectively.

The table on the following page shows the various action initiatives taken by WARC and the improvements in the relevant survey results.

a 25% drop from 2019 figures

WARC also doubled the infrastructure projects completed in the 2020/21 financial year

“Insync has been wonderful to work with and the team has added a great deal of value. The reports that we received were straightforward and insightful, making it easy for us to move from measurement to improvement. Insync’s team is very professional, knowledgeable and experienced; they always had our best interests at heart and made the entire process easy and trouble-free. Turnaround times were quick and the project was executed smoothly. I would highly recommend them as improvement partners.”
